Keeping Families and Pets Together in Our Community

Keeping Families and Pets Together in Our Community

For many families across North Georgia, a simple veterinary visit is not always within reach. Rising costs, transportation challenges, language barriers, and limited clinic access can make even basic preventive care difficult to obtain.

When that care is unavailable, small health issues can quickly become crises – leading to pet illnesses, unplanned litters, and sometimes the heartbreaking decision to surrender a beloved pet.

Planned PEThood of Georgia's Community Outreach Clinics help prevent these outcomes by bringing trusted veterinary care directly into neighborhoods where it is needed most.

Since 2021, these outreach clinics have helped thousands of pets receive essential preventive care, supporting healthier communities and reducing the number of animals entering already overburdened shelters. For many families, this is the only opportunity they have all year to access veterinary support.

The Community Impact of Your Sponsorship

When a business sponsors a clinic, it does more than fund vaccines; it helps keep families together, prevents suffering, and strengthens the wellbeing of the community we all share.

For an average cost of $50 per pet, each clinic provides a team of licensed veterinarians and assistants who provide pets with

- brief exams
- pet vaccines
- microchips
- flea prevention

Your sponsorship helps ensure that families facing financial hardship do not have to choose between caring for their pets and meeting other essential needs.

Together, we can prevent illness, reduce shelter intake, and keep pets safe in the homes where they are loved.

Why It Matters

Across Georgia, cost is one of the leading reasons families surrender their pets to shelters or rescues.
When veterinary care is accessible, pets stay home — and shelter intake declines.
A single sponsored clinic can mean:
A senior on a fixed income keeping their dog
A family avoiding an unexpected medical crisis
Dozens of pets protected from preventable disease

Your investment delivers measurable impact while aligning your brand with compassion, community stability, and leadership in animal welfare.
